Tuition costs, waivers, stipends and healthcare coverage

All PhD programs in the USA provide full tuition remission and a living stipend (this is not necessarily the case for Canadian universities, as discussed below). Essentially, there are no tuition costs. The stipends are approximately $30,000 per year on average, but can range from $20,000 to $45,000 per year, depending on the institution/program and location. The stipends are set according to the local cost of living. In addition, all PhD students are provided free healthcare coverage. The stipends are typically sufficient for a comfortable modest living and the students are discouraged from holding side jobs. Typically, Masters programs do not give tuition remissions and stipends.
